

DOES THE ECONOMY NEED—AND CAN WE AFFORD— ANOTHER JOLT OF STIMULUS?

Friday, January 29, 2010

Rudolph Penner is an Institute fellow at the Urban Institute and has held the Arjay and Frances Miller Chair in Public Policy since 1998. Previously, he was a managing director of the Barents Group, a KPMG company. He was the director of the Congressional Budget Office from 1983 to 1987, a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute from 1977 to 1983, and the assistant director for economic policy at the Office of Management and Budget from 1975 to 1977. Other posts include deputy assistant secretary for economic affairs at the Department of Housing and Urban Development and senior staff economist at the Council of Economic Advisers.

Robert Reischauer (moderator) is the president of the Urban Institute. Before being appointed to this position in 2000, he was a senior fellow in economic studies at the Brookings Institution. He served as the director of the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) from 1989 to 1995. Earlier posts include senior vice president at the Urban Institute and assistant director for human resources and deputy director at CBO. He was a member and vice chair of the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission and the chair of the National Academy of Social Insurance's Restructuring Medicare for the Long Term project.

Mark Zandi is the chief economist of Moody's Analytics, where he directs research and consulting. Moody's Analytics, a subsidiary of Moody's Corporation, is a leading provider of economic research, data, and analytical tools. Zandi's recent research has studied the determinants of mortgage foreclosure and personal bankruptcy, the economic impact of various tax and government spending policies, and the appropriate policy response to bubbles in asset markets. He wrote Financial Shock, an exposé of the financial crisis. His forthcoming book, Paying the Price, provides a roadmap for meeting the nation's daunting fiscal challenges. Zandi was an economic adviser to Senator John McCain's presidential campaign and has provided advice to the Obama administration.